Declaring Saints—How the Canonization Process Works

Initial Stages - The canonization process depends first upon the popular appeal of the holy person. Is the individual one to whom others turn for inspiration? Is he or she sought as an intercessor by the faithful for helping to secure divine intervention amid life's problems? If so, a "cause" must be established for the process of an individual's canonization to advance.

The work to advance the cause typically is accomplished by an association or guild comprised of the faithful, in conjunction with approval of members of the hierarchy. In order to foster prayer and devotion to the individual, what is more formally referred to as the "cult," this group oversees dissemination of the individual's written works and other items such as devotional materials, including prayer cards. The group also needs to secure financial resources to sustain the work that goes into advancing the cause.

An established and consistent popular devotion to the individual proposed for canonization is the foundation of any successful cause of canonization. The person's holy life must be a source of inspiration to the faithful, and the person should be petitioned through prayer for intercession to various needs and occasions. Current Church law requires the person to be deceased five year before a cause can commence, though the Pope can choose to waive this waiting period. (continued in next bulletin)
